Don't ask just anybody about your publishing problems.

Ask your colleagues in the Society for Scholarly Publishing.

- Would you like to know why some editors' rejection rates are so high?
- Are you interested in why typesetters want fewer author alterations?
- Do you want to hear what publishers are looking for in new titles?

Ask them yourself at the next Society for Scholarly Publishing workshop, seminar, or annual meeting. Those of us involved in producing and distributing scholarly books and journals have a lot to learn from each other. Through the Society's activities and publications, we can work together to solve common problems, discuss mutual interests, and insure the future well-being of scholarly publishing.

Interested?

By filling out the membership form below you start a year's worth of communication with other publishing professionals along with your subscription to the SSP LETTER, a current-awareness newsletter, and we'll send along the current Directory of Members as well.
